The church was decorated with June flowers, potted plants and ferns, and the ceremony was performed beneath a bower of roses. The bride was attired in white Spanish silk lace over bridal satin, and wore a veil of tulle and lace with coronet of orange blossoms. Her corsage was of white roses and lilies of the valley. A rainbow scheme was carried out in the attire of the bride's attendants: her sister, Miss Mary Wolfe, was dressed in powder blue georgette over pale pink satin, with a corsage of pink roses; Miss Mary Kime, sister of the bridegroom, wore a green georgette over maize satin; Miss Violet Mitchell, lavender georgette over lavender satin; Miss Isabelle Mitchell, maize georgette and gold lace over yellow satin; Miss Ruth Arment, of Harrisburg, pink georgette over pink satin. DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION PERSONAL POINTS OF VIEW

IN NEW YORK CITY NEXT WEEK TO NOMINATE CANDIDATES.

For President and Vice President—With Long List To Choose From.

On next Tuesday morning the Democratic National Convention will convene in Madison Square Garden and the invocation will be made by Cardinal Hayes of New York City. The convention is supposed to have 1008 delegates and two thirds of that number under the rule in force since the days of Andrew Jackson will be necessary to nominate. But these 1008 delegates are in part in fractions, delegates with fractional votes, so that the actual number of delegates participating in convention is 1436 and of these 405 are women. This exceeds tickets and seats provided for delegates and last minute preparations were made for the additional delegates.

United States Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, one of the great orators of the U. S. Senate, will make the keynote speech as Temporary Chairman. This is usually the first business of the convention and follows the taking of the chair. The last plans reported are that after organization, the chair will proceed to the appointment of committees and other routine work. The keynote speech will be delivered at the Tuesday evening session, so that radio may carry the message to more thousands that would hear it during the afternoon.

The outlook is that U. S. Senator Thomas J. Walsh, of Montana, will be Permanent Chairman and that Holmes S. Cummings, of Connecticut, will be chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. The hot air artists of the newspaper world have been indulging in imagined contests over the two thirds rule, but the outlook is for contests to be narrowed to the nominations. The three leading candidates are William G. McAdoo, with 291 instructed delegates, Alfred E. Smith with 123 instructed delegates, and Oscar W. Underwood with 29 instructed delegates. Thirty two other Democrats have been mentioned for the nomination for president, many of them favorite sons. It has been the impression that neither of the three first named will be able to get a two thirds vote and that the result will be a getting together on one of the dark horses, and John W. Davis, of West Virginia, former Ambassador to Great Britain, seems to be the favorite dark horse.

Democracy has many leaders of unquestioned great ability and hopes are centered on a ticket that will be recognized at once as one of the highest ability.

Nearby Forestry Meeting Next Week.

The Pennsylvania Forestry Association will hold its annual summer meeting at Harrisburg and Chambersburg on June 25, 26 and 27. The opening session will be held in the Capitol Building, Harrisburg, on the evening of June 25. On Thursday, June 26, a motor trip will be taken through the Michaux and Mont Alto State Forests. The party will go to Pine Grove Furnace by way of Carlisle and Mount Holly, where luncheon will be served in the State Forest Park.

The evening meeting of June 26 will be held in the high school at Chambersburg, where Dr. Ethelbert D. Warfield, President of Wilson College, will welcome the members of the Association. An interesting program has been prepared for the evening meeting at Chambersburg. Alfred E. Rupp of the State Department of Forests and Waters, formerly in charge of the Buchanan State Forest, with headquarters at Fort Loudon, will speak on "The Recreational Development of the State Forests." Prof. J. S. Illick, Chief of the Bureau of Information of the State Department of Forests and Waters, and formerly Acting Director of the State Forest School at Mont Alto, will give an illustrated talk on "Tree Flowers."

Prof. Illick's lecture will be illustrated by some of the most beautifully colored slides on tree flowers that have been shown in the State. Two moving pictures will feature the evening program. One of the pictures has been procured from the U. S. Forest Service, the other is contributed by the New York Conservation Commission. The public is invited to the meeting.

On Friday, June 27, a field trip will be taken to Mont Alto, where the Mont Alto State Forest, the State Forest School and the Mont Alto forest tree nursery will be visited. Dr. E. A. Ziegler, Director of the State Forest School, and Prof. George S. Perry will address the gathering at luncheon, which will be served in the Mont Alto State Forest Park.

Dr. Henry S. Drinker, President Emeritus of Lehigh University, is President of the Association. The Chambersburg headquarters of the meeting will be at the Hotel Washington.

FARMERS AT STATE COLLEGE

LIVESTOCK JUDGING CONTEST CREATES MUCH INTEREST.

Adams County Boys' Livestock Judging Team Win the General Livestock Judging Trophy.

R. E. Underwood, County Farm Agent, returned yesterday with the boys' judging team from Adams County, bringing with them the spoils of victory. He feels very proud of the boys and the manner in which they performed. He wishes it to be known that the boys and himself are very grateful to those organizations which contributed the money and made it possible for Adams County boys to shine so brilliantly. The expenses for taking the boys to the College as an Adams County Team were contributed by the Fairfield National Bank, The Gettysburg Chamber of Commerce, and the Biglerville National Bank.

The trophy, a large silver loving cup, won by Chester Garretson, Flora Dale, Clifford Bucher, Biglerville; Harold Wortz, Fairfield, is the largest cup of the several awarded in the various contests. The contest featured the annual Junior Farmers' Week at the Agricultural School of the Pennsylvania State College attended by more than four hundred boys and girls.

Twelve teams competed in the General livestock contest which included horses, beef cattle and hogs. The Adams County Team had a lead of 104 points over Mercer County who stood second in the contest. Chester Garretson, of the Adams County team, was high scoring individual of the contest, with Clifford Bucher fifth.

The winners of the dairy cattle and general livestock contest will receive trips to the National Dairy Show and the International Livestock Exposition next fall.

Although weather was rather gloomy some two thousand farmers flocked during the day the college farms viewing the demonstrations and experiments, listening to talks by Extension and Faculty Specialists on every phase of agriculture.

Those present from Adams County were: Roy Raffensperger, President of the Extension Association; J. C. Bream, Secretary; E. F. Strausbaugh, Treasurer; Harry Brown, also of the Executive Committee, and Professor Martin of the Fairfield School.

In the farmers' open dairy judging contest, won by E. R. Loy, of Loysville, Perry County, Pennsylvania, in which a pure breed bull calf was the prize, J. C. Bream and Harry Brown, both dairymen, received honorable mention, having placed Jerseys and Guernseys correctly.

Each year Farmers' Day comes to mean more and more to the farmers of the state. Those present from Adams County only regretted that more of the farmers of Adams County were not there.

This trophy won by the Adams County Live Stock Judging team will be exhibited at Cook's Clothing Store.

AUTO COLLISION KILLS MAN

Coroner's Jury Finds Drivers of Cars Negligent.

Thomas Loudon, of York Springs, died four hours after receiving injuries when two automobiles collided last Sunday. He was not in either car, but standing with J. E. Clapper at the heavy iron railing around garage at the dangerous crossing at York Springs. Dr. and Mrs. M. D. Bishop were driving toward Hanover, the latter driving, and a car driven by Ralph E. Davis was going toward Harrisburg, struck the Bishop car, which crashed against the heavy railing, fracturing both legs and inflicting internal injuries causing death.

Coroner Dr. E. A. Miller held an inquest on Monday with a jury composed of Gil P. Emmert, J. A. Bolen, Geo. E. Deatrick, H. M. Gardner, Earl Miller and O. F. Lerew. After hearing the testimony of two eye witnesses, Messrs. J. E. Clapper and Associate Judge H. B. Pearson, and Dr. E. W. Cashman, the coroner's jury returned a verdict that Loudon's death was "caused by the negligence of the drivers of the two automobiles which collided at York Springs last Sunday evening."

Child Falls Into Well.

Grace Brenneman, the two year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Brenneman, narrowly escaped drowning on Thursday afternoon, when she fell into a well at her home, Union Twp. Repairs were being made to the pump bed and in a moment when no one was watching the little tot started to run across a board over well. She lost her balance and fell ten feet to the water which was twenty feet deep. Other children playing near saw the accident and called Mrs. Brenneman, who summoned a neighbor and together they tore down a clothesline and tied it around the waist of an eight year old brother and lowered him into the well. When he reached the surface of the water his little sister had started to sink, and was already under the water, but he stuck manfully at his job and succeeded in catching hold of her and together they were pulled to the top. The little girl was unconscious but with the aid of a physician she was revived and except for the shock has suffered no ill effects.

And Now "Coolidge and Dawes."

The Republican Convention nominating Coolidge and Dawes is receiving appraisal and valuation. The Coolidge managers were in absolute control and Republican leaders in Congress were compelled to go away back and sit down. The Coolidge bosses ruled everything, platform, speeches, etc., except the tail of the ticket. The party in Congress was lined up almost unanimously for the bonus, but the word bonus is not in platform by order of Coolidge. The plank reaffirming the government's desire to remain out of the League of Nations was about to develop into a row when it was made known that it was as Coolidge wanted it. The Coolidge steam roller did its master's bidding.

The New York Times editorially declared that upon U. S. Senator Lodge the new party control owed out of its way deliberately to inflict the greatest humiliation of his career and other Senators were left cooling their heels outside the room of committees into which they used to be invited to write platforms and dictate nominations.

The Cleveland performance suggests that Congress might be supreme in Washington, but at Cleveland Coolidge was master.

In the history of the country there have been very few refusals to accept nominations, but the Cleveland convention presented one of these episodes that reflects on the ticket. General Lowden declining the nomination actually said:

"I have said a thousand times, a think, that I would decline if nominated. I shall do what I can for Republican success as a private citizen, but I cannot accept a place on the ticket."

Then at the end of the convention, after the Coolidge managers had failed to get Lowden to keep what they had given him, after they had failed to induce Borah to take it, after they threw all their influence to Hoover, the opposition turned upon them with Dawes and nominated him.

There is no prominent man in the Republican party who is as much unlike Coolidge as Dawes.

Coolidge is conservative to the 10th degree while "Hell and Maria" Dawes is not afraid at any time to voice his opinion and fight for it. By the way that "Hell and Maria" must send a shiver down a blue-stocking backbone. One says America's desire is to remain out of the League of Nations, while the other pitches in and writes agreement which nations accept as part of their understanding. One is without color, as a black New England landscape, while the other is as colorful as a Buffalo Bill. If the nomination of latter had not happened the way it did, it might have looked like a double cross and it might be used that way, one lining up the conservatives and the other the radicals.

Sentences Given Prisoners.

On Monday at the June Argument Court Judge D. P. McPherson and Associate Judges E. P. Miller and H. B. Pearson made the following sentences:

Charles Hawn, of Biglerville, pled guilty to operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated and was sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and because of repeated offenses of the kind was ordered to sell his automobile.

Bernard Gebhart, of near New Oxford, pled guilty to operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated and was sentenced to pay a fine of $200.

Both men were to report periodically to a parole officer. The Court tried to get both men to tell where they got the liquor. Hawn replied from a man by name of Joe at Pennsylvania and Gebhart from a man by name of Gorker at Midway.

Elmer Toddes, who pled guilty to charge of illegal possession of liquor, was sentenced to 15 months in county jail and a fine of $200.

Frank Hubbard, arrested with Toddes, was placed on parole for two years and advised to re-establish his church relations.

Harrison Runkle, a 16-year-old boy, guilty of the larceny of a pocketbook belonging to Mrs. Samuel Weiser, was sentenced to the Huntingdon Reformatory.

George Chronister and William Treadway, both of Hanover, were each fined $200 and costs for violation of the liquor laws. The State Police had arrested men while driving a truck loaded with beer. The fines and costs were paid and men discharged.

Benjamin Liversperger, of Edge Grove, was sentenced to jail for sixty days and a fine of $200 for illicit liquor selling.

Ott-Chandler—Charles I. Ott, formerly of Littlestown, but now of Washington, D. C. and Miss Ellen S. Chandler, daughter of Mrs. Sarah L. B. Chandler, also of Washington, were married last week. Mr. Ott was the former well-known secretary-treasurer of the Littlestown Milling Company for a number of years, having left that place about seven years ago, since which time he has resided in Washington.

Rogers-Crawford—Mrs. Mary Crawford, of Tyrone, formerly of Gettysburg, and Silas H. Rogers, of Mount Union, were married at the parsonage of St. James Lutheran Church Wednesday evening by Rev. Earl J. Bowman. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wilson, of Gettysburg, were the attendants. A luncheon was served at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. G. Heagey, of Steinwehr avenue. After a wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers will reside at Mount Carmel, where the bridegroom is employed as manager of Robert's Furnishing Store.

Adams County Ranks High In Swine Production.

"There was a period when the competition of the hogs produced on cheap corn belt land, and under low intermediate handling charges, placed eastern pork production on a very close margin. There is a very definite change in conditions, with high land values in the corn belt and with the accompanying high costs in all the intermediate handling steps, with the result that the eastern farmer is again back on a favorable competitive basis in pork production. He must, of course, produce a type of hog the market demands and must supplement the grain feed to a greater extent by forage crops so as to keep down the cost of concentrates."

The foregoing statement was made by John M. McKee, Deputy Secretary of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, as a comment on the tabulation showing the number of swine on farms in this State in each of the last five census years, and the estimated value at the beginning of the current year. Discussing the subject further, he said:

"Nearness to markets gives a price to Pennsylvania pork producers of from one cent to several cents a pound above the central stock yard prices. Corn has been the great pork producing feed and Pennsylvania's hog population has largely grown-up around counties high in corn production, such as Lancaster, York, Berks, Franklin, Cumberland and Bucks.

"While relatively corn has been high and pork low the last two years, many careful observers of the market feel that this condition is likely to be reversed and that pork may be on a more favorable side of the market the coming year."

Adams County ranks eleventh in swine production in the 65 counties of the State. In their order, Lancaster is first, then York, Berks, Montgomery, Franklin, Bucks, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Chester, Lehigh, Adams, Cumberland first with more hogs to the farm. In 1880 Adams County had 22,172 hogs; in 1890, 27,540; in 1900, 23,835; in 1910, 22,008; in 1920, 33,303; in 1923, 33,041. The average on January 1, 1924, of the hogs is 59.75 and the total value $312,420.00. The average price in the State is $2.50 higher, or $12.25.

ALL OUT OF SORTS?

So Was This Gettysburg Woman Who Tells Her Experience.

All too often women accept their pains and aches as natural to their sex. They fail to realize that weak kidneys are often to blame for that backache, those headaches, dizzy spells and that tired, depressed feeling. Thousands have found new health and strength by helping the weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. This Gettysburg case is one of many.

Mrs. Chas. Kappes, 229 N. Stratton St., says: "Heavy pains in the small of my back gave me no end of trouble. Mornings I felt stiff and sore and this made it hard for me to get around. Dizziness came on often. My kidneys were weak, too. I got Doan's Pills from the People's Drug Store, and they rid me of the backaches and did away with the other signs of kidney trouble."

Price 60c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get the same that Mrs. Kappes had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

Her Marketing Project

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Clarissa Hurd was experiencing, for the first time in her twenty-odd years of life, the hardships due to having an insufficient income and no training in any wage-earning work.

"But," she was explaining to the aunt with whom she was living in the suburban town, "I know I can find a way in which to support myself. I shall not let my mind rest until it comes to me with a bright and promising idea."

Aunt Emily was a little old-fashioned, but she did believe in concentration, and if Clarissa seemed a trifle absent-minded in the next few days it was because she was searching the realms of possibilities for her own material future, and her aunt sympathized with her mood.

"I have it—I have it," she almost shouted one afternoon as she dashed in at the back door, letting in a flood of red sunlight from the fast disappearing disk of fire.

Aunt Emily was getting supper—they still had supper, as did many others in the suburban settlement where the men folks came home at noon from factory or store for a noon-day dinner.

"You might be going in for the movie business the way you are gyrating around," dryly remarked Aunt Emily.

"No, Aunt Emily—not yet. I'm going to turn this old jitney that father left to me as his only bequest into a means of making a living."

Aunt Emily was curious. "How so?"

"I'm going to start a little profession of my own—house marketing. Most of the people up here in this settlement have to go on the trolley car to the village to market. It costs them fourteen cents for carfare, but they have often told me it pays them to go for their things even then. And in the new shops in the village there is no delivery, but the groceries, meats and vegetables are marked far below those sold in the stores that have a delivery system and a telephone."

Clarissa was growing enthusiastic as she felt her aunt's understanding of her project.

"I propose to go to the neighbors, one by one, and tell them that I will call at their homes every morning or twice a week, as they see fit, and get their whole list of errands for the day. I'll take the laundry, collars and all the things that have to go to the village, get the groceries, meats, and take the children's shoes to the cobbler. All this for a quarter, only eleven cents more than carfare, and all the time and trouble saved for the housewife. I'll get the best of attention from the stores and the customers will reap the benefit. Do you see, Aunt Emily?"

"It seems like a feasible idea, my dear. And it costs so little to run that car and Pa takes care of it for you."

Clarissa went to work at once to make a list of the persons who she thought would appreciate her services. One by one she called on them and explained her purpose.

Inside of four weeks she had more than a dozen families a day on an average and numbered forty housewives on her list.

In the big grocery store where Clarissa did most of her ordering she was well liked, as much for her charming personality as for the business she brought to the shop daily.

"Miss Hurd, we are having a new manager in here next week," said Mr. Andrews, the young man who had been taking care of her orders.

Clarissa's face fell. "Oh, are you going?"

The young man blushed. "Yes. I have been made manager of a chain."

"They have promoted me faster than I deserved, I fear," he explained. "I hope you won't make the lack of my personal attention to your orders keep you away from the store."

Clarissa assured him that she would not, but she could not see how any new manager could make himself as popular with the shoppers as had young Mr. Andrews. The place was clean, everything was fresh and courteous was the object of every clerk.

On Monday Clarissa began her day's work with a big list of orders. She sat down on the wooden stool and got out her marketing list and pencil.

"Have you been served?" she heard a voice at her elbow ask.

She turned to look into warm golden brown eyes and a smiling face. He was a stranger.

"No—thank you. Not yet." The young man took the place opposite her at the counter and filled her order quickly, with a quick understanding of the new stock. He was the new manager, Robert Underwood.

"I'll have the things put in your car, madam," he said, when the order was ready.

Clarissa thanked him and led the way to her shabby jitney standing at the curb.

Mr. Underwood looked at the car as if he quite understood that this was merely the service car and that there was a better one at home, perhaps many. No one would be making such a big order if she owned only this ragged-looking jitney.

Clarissa thought she understood the expression and decided to have a little fun playing the grande dame to this new and unlightened young store manager.

For weeks she made him think she was a wealthy young woman, quite out of his class, he had decided. With reservations he referred to his own station in life. Clarissa had noticed the shape of his hands and had caught the cultured tone of his voice occasionally.

One morning when they were loading Clarissa's big order into her old car she observed that her rear left tire was flat.

"Oh, dear," she sighed. "And these groceries are late now."

Robert Underwood came quickly to her rescue. "I happen to have my car standing at the back. Won't you let me run them—and you—home and see that this goes to the garage for you?"

His voice was so kindly, the necessity that she be on time so important that Clarissa accepted the offer.

It was nearly two miles from the village to Clarissa's home. She had all the groceries deposited on her aunt's front stoop, and then and there she explained her profession.

"And I thought you were some horribly rich person who would not even know that I existed," said the young man, knowingly. "Was that kind?"

"It was purely business," Clarissa insisted.

"Perhaps you'd let me come to see you some evening and explain to you just what the business means to me—just why I am taking personal charge of each store in turn to find out its requirements. Would you be interested?"

Clarissa nodded. "I'd love to know," she said, as he left.

When he did come to see her he told her more than that he was the son of one of the members of the firm that ran the chain of stores in small towns. He told her that he had had a premonition that in this particular vicinity he was going to find the only girl in the world.

"And—have you found her—yet?" asked Clarissa.

"Have I?"

Clarissa decided that he had and it was not long before she had to sell out her marketing profession to a young woman in the town.

DIVERS TASTES IN READING

Books May Be Said to Have Their "Seasons," Librarians Looking Forward to Demand.

Statistics obtained from a city library show that most of the serious reading done by the public is done during the winter, poetry and drama being chiefly in demand. In the spring, in addition to books on gardening, there is an increased demand for books on outdoor sports. During the summer and fall fiction shows a big jump. Married women chiefly read fiction, while men prefer books on travel and autobiography. After the age of fifty, says a librarian, both men and women read solely to pass the time, choosing fiction exclusively.

The head of a children's department says that both boys and girls during the last few years have been asking for mature books, particularly books on animals. This demand has been traced directly to the children's page stories about animals at the zoo. Boys' taste in reading, it appears, has altered since twenty years ago. Adventure stories, then popular by writers such as Optic, Ellis and Alger, are no longer asked for by youngsters, and tales of school athletics, young heroes of the diamond and football field have taken their place, with the Boy Scout books running a close second.

Beetles Centuries Old.

Examining a 1,700-year-old tree from the giant forest of Tulare county, California, a scientist found that two wood-boring beetles, sealed in a hole in the tree over a thousand years, are not appreciably different from beetles of the same species now infesting the forest. It is judged the tree was struck by lightning when about 421 years old, and that it was at that time the tree became infested. Later, the indications are, the tree healed the wound, thus completely sealing in the beetles, says an exchange.

Though it is considered remarkable that there has been so little change in so variable a species, one must also recognize, says the scientist making the discovery, that the insect in question pertains to an archaic type, and that undoubtedly the characteristics of the species had been well fixed before the Christian era.

Tibetans Healthy Race.

General Bruce of the Everest expedition described Tibetan porters as carrying weights of over a hundred pounds each up an altitude of 5,000 feet to a height of 14,000 feet. One girl, he says, shouldered a tent weighing 150 pounds and with tireless energy carried it up the pass.

The Tibetan tribes live on natural foodstuffs, such as milk and corn and green foods, with almost no sugar or alcohol; they keep their bodies fit by hard exercise taken in the open air and sunshine. They are very long-lived and free from all the nervous and digestive troubles, appendicitis, colitis and other kinds of "itis" which afflict the dwellers in big cities.

Woods Used in Commerce.

Broom handles, clothespins, refrigerators and washing machines are often made of beech. This is moderately strong, heavy, hard wood, and its wear-resisting qualities make it especially desirable for these uses.

Cypress is one of the strongest of soft woods. It has a peculiar moisture-resisting property that causes it to be in wide demand for making shingles, ice cream freezers, pails, clothes wringers and laundry tubs.

Ironing tables, butter vats, washboards and broom handles are frequently made of spruce, which besides being light in weight is soft, but stiff and strong.
